Week ending October 4, 2024

An eventful week last week led to markets bouncing around but trending down for most of the week, resulting from increasing tensions in the Middle East and the East Coast port strike. After the strike tentatively ended late Thursday and a strong jobs report on Friday, we saw markets recover and post modest gains for the week. While the Federal Reserve seeks to balance its dual mandates of stable prices and full employment, last week may have some wondering if inflation concerns are truly in the rear-view mirror as oil prices increased following Iran's missile attack as well as US labor strikes becoming more common and leading to potentially higher wages. We will get inflation data next week that can help answer some of these questions, but for now the US economy appears to be on firm footing after posting the strongest job gains in the past six months paired with upward revisions to July and August's job report numbers.

Fixed Income Markets Overview

- Interest rates rose across the yield curve, with the 2-year yield seeing the largest jump at 38 basis points.
- Overall, we saw the middle of the curve rise more than the short- and long-ends end. The often watches 2- and 10-year spread continues to suggest the yield curve is normalizing, but the spread did collapse to just 5 bps.
- Mortgage rates ticked up slightly to 6.12% last week. While this broke their recent trend downward over the past few weeks, rates still declined over 1.5% in the last year. Combine lower rates with slowing house price growth, increasing inventory, and rising incomes means we should see housing market conditions improve in coming months if these trends persist.

Equity Markets Overview

- All three major domestic indices saw another week of modest gains after a bumpy start to the week. The S&P (+0.26%) and Dow Jones (+0.13%) continue to set new highs, while the Nasdaq (+0.11%) is about 2.7% off its record high from three months ago.
- Heightened tension in the Middle East leading to increased oil prices helped the Energy sector win the week by posting a +7% gain. Other sector performance was mixed with 5 of the 11 S&P sectors falling between -0.93% to -1.98% and the other 5 ending the week up between +.05% to +2.2%.
- From a size perspective, large cap stocks' (+0.3%) beat out their mid-cap (0%) and small-cap (-0.7%) peers. Growth stocks beat out value stocks across all market cap sizes, this was most pronounced in small caps where growth fell only -0.3% to their value counterparts sliding -1.1%.
