Week ending June 20, 2025

Last week, markets reflected a cautious tone as investors digested a mix of economic signals and geopolitical developments. The Federal Reserve held interest rates steady for the fourth consecutive meeting, maintaining a patient stance amid lingering inflation and trade uncertainties. Updated projections showed a slight downgrade in 2025 GDP expectations to 1.4% and an upward revision in inflation forecasts, suggesting a stagflationary tilt. Retail sales data was mixed—headline sales declined, but the control group, which feeds into GDP, rose modestly. Housing data was broadly weak, with notable drops in permits and starts, while jobless claims remained stable. Geopolitical tensions, particularly the Israel-Iran conflict, kept oil prices elevated, contributing to market unease. Equity markets, including the S&P 500 and Russell 2000, showed signs of consolidation, with breadth indicators weakening. Overall, markets appear to be in a “wait-and-see” mode, with near-term sentiment slightly bearish barring any major geopolitical or trade-related surprises.

Fixed Income Markets Overview

- The Federal Reserve kept its benchmark rate unchanged at 4.25%–4.50%, but its updated projections showed a more cautious outlook, with upward revisions to inflation and unemployment forecasts and a downward revision to 2025 GDP growth.
- Yields on 2-year and 10-year Treasuries declined by 6 and 3 basis points, respectively, reflecting a modest shift toward safety amid geopolitical tensions and mixed economic data.
- Despite the Fed's patient tone, market pricing for rate cuts in 2025 remained largely unchanged, with expectations for just over two 25-basis-point cuts by year-end.

Equity Markets Overview

- It was a cautious week for US equities as the S&P 500 closed with a weekly loss of 0.12% while the Nasdaq and Dow Jones posted gains of 0.22% and 0.07%, respectively. On a YTD basis, S&P 500 continues to lead the pack with a 2.12% gain.
- Like last week, most sectors were down while a few managed to climb higher, particularly the Energy sector. Biggest losers include Healthcare, Telecommunications, and Materials falling 2.66%, 1.73%, and 1.21%, respectively. Energy, Technology, and Financials were the only sectors to post weekly gains of 1.1%, 0.88%, and 0.81%, respectively.
- Large caps booked a small loss while small and mid-cap stocks were modestly positive on the week, with mid-cap stocks leading the pack on the week with a 0.6% gain. From a style lens, value modestly outperformed growth across all size segments.

Alternative Markets Overview

- Gold prices fell nearly 2% last week as the conflict between Israel and Iran continued to escalate. The US may announce its intention to get involved in the next two weeks. It is reasonable to expect near-term volatility in this period of heightened geopolitical uncertainty.
- Oil prices rose around 1% last week reaching nearly $74/barrel, driven by heightened geopolitical tensions following Israeli airstrikes on Iranian facilities and concerns over potential supply disruptions.
